A significant challenge for reopening the economy and returning to "normalcy" during the COVID-19 pandemic is addressing whether, when, and how schools and colleges will open this fall. As with the initial shelter-in-place orders and mask requirements, these issues are being addressed differently in each state. Most state governors are foregoing a "one-size-fits-all" approach by authorizing each school district to decide whether to reopen fully, partially reopen, or only allow online curriculums. School districts in high infection areas, such as metro-Atlanta, Houston, Los Angeles, and San Francisco, have
